The 'Graves' at the Gold Butte Townsite are a popular destination and folks are attracted to this spot as it exemplifies the rugged, independent souls that settled our desert.

Arthur Coleman and William Garrett lived at Gold Butte from early adulthood until they died in 1958 and 1961, respectively.

They both loved to visit and many locals made the trek to Gold Butte just to sit around their campfire and catch up on the local gossip. For some reason, almost 60 plus miles from the nearest towns, these 2 knew just about everything and everybody—and had fun sharing such. Their spirits live on whenever folks gather around their graves and share stories, gossip, and grow the legend of Art and Bill.

Take multiple maps whenever you venture out; this may seem redundant, but one map may focus on topography, another on springs or landmarks.

One advantage Gold Butte has over many other areas in this region is its popularity! Anyone who ever visits Gold Butte, comes back—time and time again. This popularity has a side-benefit—-everyone wants to show their love!

Below is an Eagle Scout project, installing kiosks in Gold Butte; assisted by friends, family, and BLM personnel, a local teenager fulfills his Eagle Scout requirements and shows his love of this unique desert paradise.
